

aid; even now, most of us spend more of our money on our friends and families than on ourselves; while likely as not there will always be competitive people in the world, there's no reason why society has to be based on encouraging such behavior, let alone making people compete over the basic necessities of life. That only serves the interests of people in power, who want us to live in fear of one another. That's why anarchists call for a society based not only on free association but mutual aid. The fact is that most children grow up believing in anarchist morality, and then gradually have to realize that the adult world doesn't really work that way. That's why so many become rebellious, or alienated, even suicidal as adolescents, and finally, resigned and bitter as adults; their only solace, often, being the ability to raise children of their own and pretend to them that the world is fair. But what if we really could start to build a world which really was at least founded on principles of justice? Wouldn't that be the greatest gift to one's children one could possibly give?

Do you believe that human beings are fundamentally corrupt and evil, or that certain sorts of people (women, people of color, ordinary folk who are not rich or highly educated) are inferior specimens, destined to be ruled by their betters?

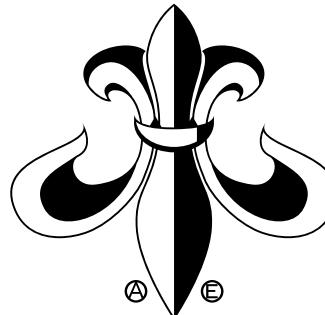

If you answered "yes", then, well, it looks like you aren't an anarchist after all. But if you answered "no", then chances are you already subscribe to 90% of anarchist principles, and, likely as not, are living your life largely in accord with them. Every time you treat another human with consideration and respect, you are being an anarchist. Every time you work out your differences with others by coming to reasonable compromise, listening to what everyone has to say rather than letting one person decide for everyone else, you are being an anarchist. Every time you have the opportunity to force someone to do something, but decide to appeal to their sense of reason or justice instead, you are being an anarchist. The same goes for every time you share something with a friend, or decide who is going to do the dishes, or do anything at all with an eye to fairness.

Now, you might object that all this is well and good as a way for small groups of people to get on with each other, but managing a city, or a country, is an entirely different matter. And of course there is something to this. Even if you decentralize society and puts as much power as possible in the hands of small communities, there will still be plenty of things that need to be coordinated, from running railroads to deciding on directions for medical research. But just because something is complicated does not mean there is no way to do it democratically. It would just be complicated. In fact, anarchists have all sorts of different ideas and visions about how a complex society might manage itself. To explain them though would go far beyond the scope of a little introductory text like this. Suffice it to say, first of all, that a lot of people have spent a lot of time coming up with models for how a really democratic, healthy society might work; but second, and just as importantly, no anarchist claims to have a perfect blueprint. The last thing we want is to impose prefab models on society anyway. The truth is we probably can't even imagine half the problems that will come up when we try to create a democratic society; still, we're confident that, human ingenuity being what it is, such problems can always be solved, so long as it is in the spirit of our basic principles—which are, in the final analysis, simply the principles of fundamental human decency.

Louisville Anarchist Federation Federation

<http://LAFF-experiment.org>

NO BORDERS

<http://ImagineNoBorders.org>

Louisville's Radical Lending Library

Are You
An Anarchist

The
Answer May
Surprise You

DAVID GRAEBER

and is there really any reason to believe this? When you sum out what would happen without states or capitalisms world people live outside of the control of governments because lived without governments. In many parts of the modern day. They do not kill each other. Mostly they just get on about their lives the same as anyone else would. Of course, in a complex, urban, technological society this would be more complicated; but technology can also make all these problems a lot easier to solve. In fact, we have not even begun to think about our social needs. How many hours would we really need to work in order to maintain a functional society — that is, if we got rid of all the useless or destructive occupations like telemarketers, lawyers, prison guards, financial analysts, public relations experts, bureaucrats and politicians, and turn our best scientific minds away from working on space weaponry or stock market systems to mechanizing away dangerous or annoying tasks like coal mining or cleaning the bathroom, and live hours a day? Four? Three? Two? Nobody knows because no one is even asking this kind of question.

Do you really believe those things you tell your children that your parents told you? Do wrongs don't make a night." Clean up your own mess." Do unto others...". "Don't be mean to people just because they're different." Perhaps we should decide whether we're lying to our children when we tell them about right and wrong, or whether we're willing to take our own injunctions seriously. Because if you take these moral principles to their logical conclusions, you arrive

"Two wrongs don't make a right." "Clean up your own mess." "Do unto others...". "Don't be mean to people just because they're different." Perhaps we should decide whether we're lying to our children when we tell them about moral principles to their logical conclusions, you arrive

Do you really believe those things you tell your children or that your parents told you?

need to work in order to maintain a functional society that is, if we got rid of all the useless or destructive cults, if we got rid of all the useless or destructive national analysts, public relations experts, bureaucrats and politicians, and turn our best scientific minds away from working on space weapons or stock market systems to mechanizing away dangerous or annoying tasks like coal mining or clearing the bathroom, and instead dedicate the remaining work among everyone equal in five hours a day? Four? Three? Two? Nobody knows because no one is even asking this kind of question.

the effects of power, that make people stupid and
to become remarkably understanding. To cut a long story short, do matters just as much as anyone else's, made on the basis of general consent?

member of a club or sports team or any other organization where decisions are not imposed by one of anarchist principles! Another basic anarchist values voluntary association. This is simply a matter of democratic principles to ordinary life. The only is that anarchists believe it should be possible to society in which everything could be organized along
, all groups based on the free consent of their
and therefore, that all top-down, military styles of
on like armies or bureaucracies or large corporations,
chains of command, would no longer be necessary.
ou don't believe that would be possible. Perhaps t every time you reach an agreement by consensus, n't another person, come to an understanding, on's particular situation or needs, you are being an compromise by taking due consideration of the part with another person, even if you don't realize it.

wereed, "yes", then you belong to an organization works on anarchist principles! Another basic anarchist voluntary association. This is simply a matter of democratic principles to ordinary life. The only
is that anarchists believe it should be possible to
society in which everything could be organized along
, all groups based on the free consent of their
and therefore, that all top-down, military styles of
on like armies or bureaucracies or large corporations,
chains of command, would no longer be necessary.
ou don't believe that would be possible. Perhaps at every time you reach an agreement by consensus, n threats, every time you make a voluntary comromise by taking due consideration of the ons's particular situation or needs, you are being an -even if you don't realize it member of a club or sports team or any other organization where decisions are not imposed by one made on the basis of general consent?

the effects of power, that make people stupid and
dile. : Anarchists believe that for the most part it is power to become remarkably understanding. To cut a long
onions really do matter just as much as anyone else's,

Chances are you have already heard something about who anarchists are and what they are supposed to believe. Changes are almost everything you have heard is nonsense. Many people seem to think that anarchists are proponents of violence, chaos, and destabilization, or that they are against all forms of order and organization, or that they are crazed nihilists who just want to blow everything up. In reality, nothing could be further from the truth. Anarchists are simply people who believe human beings are capable of behaving in a reasonable fashion without having to be forced to. It is really a very simple notion.

But it's one that the rich and powerful have always found extremely dangerous.

At their very simplest, anarchist beliefs turn on to two elements: either very assump-tions. The first is that human beings are, under ordinary circumstances, about as reasonable as themselves and their communities without needing to be told how. The second is that power corrupts. Most of all, anarchism is just a matter of having the courage to take the simple principles of common decency that we all live by, and to follow them through to their logical conclusions. Odd though this may seem, in most important ways you are probably already an anarchist – you just don't realize it.

At their very simplest, anarchist beliefs turn on to two elements: under ordinary circumstances, about as reasonable as they are allowed to be, and can organize themselves and decent as they are. The first is that human beings are, under ordinary assumptions. The second is that power corrupts. Most of all, anarchism is just a matter of having the courage to take the simple principles of common decency that we all live by, and to follow them through to their logical conclusions. Odd though this may seem, in most important ways you are probably already an anarchist—impossible to start by taking a few examples from everyday life.

Chances are you have already heard something about who anarchists are and what they are supposed to do. Chances are, many people seem to think that anarchists are proponents of violence, chaos, and destruction, that they are against all forms of order and organization, or that they are crazed nihilists who just want to blow everything up. In reality, nothing could be further from the truth.

Anarchists are simply people who believe human beings are capable of behaving in a reasonable fashion without having to be forced to. It is really a very simple notion.

But it's one that the rich and powerful have always found is therefore aware of the responsibility to others that choose, and when they deal with others who are equally desirable and considerate when they are dealing with man nature is such that they cannot be trusted to do given power over others. Give someone such power, economic system which is stupid and unfair?

live that most politicians are selfish, egoistical swine wered „yes“, then you subscribe to the anarchist today's society—at least, in its broadest outlines. believe that power corrupts and those who spend a lives seeking power are the very last people who ave it. Anarchists believe that our present economic more likely to reward people for selfish and ous behavior than for being decent, caring human ost people feel that way. The only difference is that r away—and this is what the faithful servants of the re always most likely to insist—anything that won't t that wasn't true?

If you answered "yes", then you are used to acting like an anarchist. The most basic anarchist principle is self-organization: the assumption that human beings do not need to be threatened with prosecution in order to be able to come to reason with each other with dignity and respect, or to treat each other with dignity and respect. Everyone believes they are capable of behaving reasonably themselves. If they think laws and police are unnecessary, it is only because they don't believe that other people are. But if you think about it, don't those people all feel exactly the same way about you? Anarchists argue that almost all the anti-social behavior which makes us think it's necessary to have armies, police, prisons, and governments to control our lives, is actually caused by the systematic inequalities and injustices those armies, police, prisons and governments make possible. It's all a vicious circle. If people are used to being treated like their opinions do not matter, then they are likely to become angry and cynical, even violent—which of course makes it easy for those in power to say that they opinions do not matter. Once they understand that